Among the many seeds that were planted, it was my experience with a FOCUS bible study group that brought me back to Christ. I was raised a holiday, drop-in-sacrament kind of Catholic. While I always believed in Jesus' message, I doubted his divinity and the relevance of the Church in my life. When I was in grad school at Montana State University, I was surrounded by agnostics and devout atheists. They were all good people, but it definitely seemed like something was missing from our lives. One day, I walked by a FOCUS table on my way to class and felt compelled to stop and chat. I received a phone call shortly after and was invited to a women's bible study. I agreed to try it out. They were all nice girls who regularly attended mass and had never strayed from the faith. I was living with my boyfriend and liked to party, I didn't exactly fit in. But it didn't matter, I was welcomed to the group and Christ's presence was with us every time we met. It was those encounters with the Holy Spirit that showed me what had been missing in my life. That was 20 years ago, and I will be forever grateful for my FOCUS group. They showed me that it was ok to ask questions, because seeking answers brings us closer to Christ.
