A word from Father Kirby:

We are Christ the King, a Catholic University Parish. What does that mean? We were established with the special mission to serve the University of Montana students, faculty and staff. This mission has expanded to include many faithful throughout Missoula, bringing about a lively and diverse parish with families from all walks of life. This being the case, we still have a particular call to serve the University.

The University of Montana is called to give young people the truth. They study the sciences that they might know the world and how it all works. Yet, we know we're left stranded, for knowing how the world works means nothing without knowing how it ought to work. It is only when we meet Jesus Christ that we see what could be, what ought to be. Without him, we wade in the abyss of truth without meaning.

What does this mean for us? Christ the King University Parish, the young and the old, are called to a rigorous pursuit and proclamation of the great truths Christ revealed in the incarnation, crucifixion and resurrection. We as Catholics have received the fullness of truth and we boldly live the mission, bringing the entire world into the loving arms of the Church. The students come with their zeal, thirsty minds and love of the intellectual life. The stable members of the parish answer with wisdom, charity, and guidance.

The beauty of being in a University Parish is having the mission right before you. Each parish has its charisms and the foundational charism here at CTK is to serve and love the students of UM. We are most alive when we serve, when we give ourselves away.

This does not mean we will not have a fully active and flourishing parish life. An essential part of serving college students is the witness of a lively, bustling parish. This will perhaps skew toward the intellectual life, given our context, but we also have a particular call to intense prayer and to the poor. All of this is part of the standard Christian call, but we will live it out in the context of our unique parish life.

What a gift it is to give ourselves to Christ in the mission. I am so excited to serve with all of you, zealous or wise.

Please consider bringing some snacks to the parish to help stock our student lounge.
